August 2008 | This plaque and the translation of the Latin script is mentioned in a book by John George Keysler: Travels through Germany, Bohemia, Hungary, Switzerland, Italy and Lorraine dated 1757, itself a translation of the original in German dated 1740.

"...Before the entrance of the great hall is a large Sturgeon, six spans and a half long (equivalent to 1.5m), cut in white marble; the head of every fish of that species, exceeding this measure, being due to the Conservators of the city. This is a perquisite of a long standing, and which, it may be supposed, will never be given up; at least, compliance is strictly insisted on in the following inscription which translates to "The heads of fishes, as far as the fins inclusively, exceeding the length of this marble standard, are, without any fraud or prevarication, to be given to the conservators, and ignorance shall not be admitted as an excuse....."

September 2008 | Another international poaching vessel, Chilbo San 33, was seen in Mombassa Harbour offloading more than 200 tons of illegally caught Patagonian Toothfish. Picture courtesy of Dr Andre Standing, Institute for Security Studies.

October 2008 | The ancient Khoi San fish traps or fuike of Stilbaai, Southern Cape. Picture courtesy of Mr Andrew Bannister.

November 2008 | The abalone divers of Hawston and Hermanus demonstrate their anger at South Africa's Minister of Environmental Affairs and Tourism after he decided to close the abalone fishery on 1 November 2007.

December 2008 | Antarctica on the horizon. Celebrating the end of a year on top of Table Mountain, Cape Town.
